A New York bald-headed man has made his hair grow by his will power. A bald statement like that might require proof.

They are always finding something in Missouri, and this time it is a coal vein seventy-five feet thick and only thirty feet under the surface.

It is said the Governor of Illinois, will retire from politics. We have no doubt of it. He has had politics enough to retire half a dozen men.

As a money-making scheme the removal of Libby prison to Chicago was a failure. The lot on which it stands is for lease and the building is to be torn down.

Mrs. Lease still rides her hobbies, but she also rides a bicycle, which makes her a sort of a "straddler," so to speak. But she still keeps "the middle of the road."

During the last big fire in San Francisco when the water ran low the firemen coupled their hose on to an 18,000 tank of claret wine and turned it on the flames.

These are days of big ocean steamers, but they are also days of big sailing vessels. A four-masted schooner has just been launched at Bremen. This is the largest sail vessel at present afloat.

The hay crop of the West and South is short this year, and the thrifty Southern farmer should take the hint and save all the hay he can. In Indiana the farmers are cutting green corn and curing it to take the place of hay.

There are lots of people in this country who do not own land enough to make a brick, but John B. Curtis, of Connecticut, is not one of them. He owns forty square miles of pasture in Nebraska, all in one patch and nicely fenced.

THE MORNING STAR

VOL. LVI.—NO. 86. WILMINGTON, N. C., SATURDAY, JULY 6, 1895. WHOLE NO. 8,792

It isn't often that hungry people have lunches served to them as a party of fire-fighters in Pennsylvania had the other day. They were fighting a forest fire hard for twenty-four hours and were as hungry as sharks when a big cloud came up and showered down fish ranging from three to eleven inches in length, and then they stopped fighting fire and went to roasting and eating fish That's the story they tell, but we don't vouch for Pennsylvania fish stories.

The Maryland Farmer says the mule is timid and should be treated with a certain degree of consideration. We do not know about the "timid" but as to the consideration we think that the concensus of opinion among those who have at any time thoughtlessly loitered in the proximity of the mule's other end will agree with the Farmer.

Thrown From a Buggy and Badly Hurt.

Mr. J. C. Wise was thrown from a buggy last night on Front street near the corner of Mulberry and badly hurt. He was picked up unconscious and carried into Mr. Nutt's drug store, where restoratives were applied and physicians hurriedly summoned. Mr. Wise was severely cut on the head and his face bruised, by striking the stone roadway, but the doctors attending him thought that his injuries would not prove serious.

The horse Mr. Wise was driving was one he had recently purchased and is a spirited animal. Coming from Southerland's stables on Second street he started to run at the corner of Front and Princess, and at Chesnut street a colored boy in the buggy with Mr. Wise was thrown out, but was not hurt. A short distance farther, just before reaching Mulberry street, one of the wheels of the buggy caught in the street car track. Easily overturning the vehicle, and as stated, throwing Mr. Wise out.

Last night after he was taken to his home, Mr. Wise was resting quietly and the doctor in attendance thought he would soon be all right again.

THE FOURTH IN RALEIGH

NO CELEBRATION AND FEW COUNTRY PEOPLE IN TOWN.

Shipping Shooting in Montgomery County. Elliott Distillery in Columbus County Destroyed—Companies of the State Guard Arranging to Go Into Camp—Governor's Appropriation for Agricultural and Mechanical College.

[Star Correspondence.]

RALEIGH, N. C., July 5.

Ex-Senator M. C. Butler, of South Carolina, is in the city. He says the Confederate monument is one of the most handsome structures he has ever seen. The Senator is in good health and is looking well.

The sun and moon have appeared hazy for the past few days, hardly reflecting a shadow. Old-timers say that the sun is like it was at the time of the great Chicago fire. The negroes are quite superstitious about it, and look upon it with solemnity.

General Passenger Agent Turk, of the Southern Railway, spent the Fourth in the city, chatting with old friends. He is considered one of the best officials in the employ of the Southern.

The Fourth was the quietest Raleigh has ever known. There was no celebration at all and few country people (who generally take the town) were on the streets.

It is said that the county convicts in Lenoir county are never manacled or imprisoned. They work during the day, and return home at night. There is only one case on record where one of them convicts ran away.

A 100-gallon illicit still has been destroyed near Hub, in Columbus county. This is an extraordinary seizure. As the still the deputies found twenty-one casks of beer, containing 165 gallons of beer each. The owner, Barham Jones, who escaped, is said to be an unusual character. He carries a Winchester with him and defies arrest. He is said to be a hospitable entertainer to all but moonshiners. He operates a big farm and a store.

News has reached here of quite a serious and distressing accident in Montgomery county, resulting from a shooting affray. Two brothers, Frank and Pink Williams, got into an altercation and their mother in trying to separate her enraged sons accidentally received a bullet shot from the pistol held by Frank. He was attempting to shoot his brother. His mother was shot through the abdomen. It is not thought that she will live.

There was only one case of disorder in the city yesterday. A convict who was sentenced to the penitentiary 14 months ago and who broke out of the Wilkes county jail has been captured and returned to the pen.

Mr. J. L. Thomasson, of the Wilson Light Infantry, was here to-day with a requisition from Col. Bratton for tents, cooking stoves, and other camp supplies for his Company which goes into camp August 10th at Morehead. They will camp in front of the Atlantic Hotel. The Charlotte Company camps at Virginia Beach July 29. The Durham and Clinton Companies are also responding with a view of encamping. All companies go into camp at their own book bearing all the expenses. It will be remembered that our General Legislature took away the appropriation.

The State Treasurer to-day received a check for $21,000 from the Government being the amount due the Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges in this State under the Morrill Act. About two-thirds of this goes to the white A. & M. College and the balance to the colored college at Greensboro.

The National Pharmaceutical Association meets in Denver, Col., to August. Mr. Wm. Simpson, of this city, is president. He will attend.

Rev. J. N. Cole has returned from the International Conference of the Epworth League. He reports that North Carolina was well represented, and that the delegates from this State enjoyed themselves very much. Next year the State Conferences convene and hear the International Conference meets again in Toronto, Canada, in July.

ROCKY MOUNT.

The Glorious Fourth—Rocky Mount Defeated—Other Items.

[Star Correspondence.]

ROCKY MOUNT, July 4.

Yesterday was a very interesting day, especially after 8 o'clock. It had been made pretty generally known that there would be a bicycle race with $100 to be competed for. Wilson's Tarboro minded Whitehead, of Rocky Mount, was the only starter in the long distance race, which was won by the former in three and 1 second. The above score will do very well for a county home team.

There was a musical concert at night which was well rendered and largely attended, and everybody pleased. Especially the song rendered by Miss Annie Gupton—"Over to the Poor House I'm Going," brought down the house. The singing was applauded everybody pleased. The conclusion was a german, which was largely attended, twenty-five couples being on the floor at one time. Tarboro was represented by a delegation of nine beauty. The early hours of the morning found the party to a close.

Speak of Good Things.

The Charlotte Observer says the city editor is not a "new woman," says: "Hush! Tell it not in Gath, the scissors have struck Charlotte. The first suggestion of bloomers nearly and what their gentlemen friends have to say on the subject when they come. They live at the southern part of the city."

One Cent a Word.

Hereafter advertisements in the Business Locals department will be charged one cent, per word for each insertion, but no advertisement, however short, will be taken for less than 20 cents. This is a reduction from former rates and it is also a convenience to advertisers, who can calculate the exact cost of their advertisements, which must be paid for always in advance.

Housekeepers who want servants are in the habit of supplying their needs from the STAR's want column. Are you looking for a situation? The STAR's want column will bring you the best results. One cent a word. But no ad. taken for less than 20 cents.

Wilmington Carrier Pigeons.

The Southport Leader says:

"Capt. John W. Harper brought down on his steamer last Friday, four carrier pigeons, which, upon the arrival of the Wilmington here, were at once set free.

The pigeons are owned by a gentleman in Wilmington, and were brought down the river first to Harper's Bier, and then here, to train them. The pigeons last Friday were set loose here at 11.40 a. m., and at 12.10 p. m. were found at their quarters in Wilmington.

THE CAROLINA MUTUAL

Fire Insurance Company.

The CAROLINA MUTUAL is a strong NORTH CAROLINA Company, and issues absolutely non-participating and non-assessable policies. Its mutual feature consists in a charter provision that one-third of its directors must be POLICY HOLDERS who are NOT stockholders elected by the POLICY HOLDERS. This is a strong point; the policy-holders who have great interests at stake, have a share in the management of the Company, and will always know its condition. Better than give the CAROLINA MUTUAL deposits all premiums received at this agency, to their credit with the WILMINGTON SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY. This makes it practically a local company. The directors of the company are

WILMINGTON, N. C.

SATURDAY MORNING, JULY 6, 1895

RAILROAD BUILDING.

The railroad constructed in the United States during the year ending with June 30th 1894 amounted to 2,347 miles, the smallest amount since 1887 when the new mileage reached 13,000 miles. From statistics collected so far for the first six months of this year it is estimated that the new mileage for 1895 will reach about 2,500 miles, a slight gain over last year. The Southern States show the most activity in this work, Texas leading, and the indications are that the South will keep in the lead.

There are several reasons for this. The Northern and older Western States are pretty well supplied with railroads, and consequently there will be little demand in those States for capital for that purpose. There is no longer the rush of immigration into the Western States that there has been in the past, no vast tracts of land to be thrown open to settlement, no new towns springing up in a day. This is all done, and while there will, of course, be some growth, such as might naturally be looked for, and some railroad building, it will be nothing in comparison with the past. There is still in the more recently settled frontier States need for some roads, but these are so sparsely settled, their production yet so limited, and railroad building so costly that there will be no eagerness on the part of capitalists to engage in that kind of work in those States for some time to come. In many respects the South now has and will for some time continue to have the advantage. The drift of immigration is now Southward and the best kind of immigration, too; Northern and Western people who have more or less capital, and are imbued with the spirit of progress and enterprise. Wherever they have located they have done much to develop the country and advertise its possibilities by the success which they have achieved. Succeeding, they will entice a much larger immigration of the same kind of people and thus with the natural increase the South will grow more populous. The greater the population the more it requires to meet their wants, the more they will have to buy, the more they will have to sell and the more need for more railroads to carry away what they have to market and bring to them what they need from other places.

With the limited capacity of the West to produce paying crops, confined as she is to a few of the staple food crops in which she has now to contend with a formidable competition by other countries, which will increase rather than diminish, the tendency of her farmers will be to seek a field where a greater variety of products is possible, where there is less hardship, and living more comfortable, even if the compensation for labor and effort were no greater.

This feeling, which has already turned thousands of Western people Southward, will keep up the movement, which will continue to grow until the tide reaches proportions out of all comparison with anything we have yet seen. There is not a Southern State in which there is not room for millions of people without crowding, and there is capacity in Southern soil under good cultivation to support sumptuously those millions when they come. As increasing population and increasing industries multiplied railroad mileage in the North and West, so will they in the South, and quite as rapidly in the more favored portions of the South.

But in addition to this we have the boundless forests and vast mineral resources of the South yet but barely opened, but sufficiently tested to establish their importance as factors of wealth and power, which to fully utilize must be put in connections with railroads to afford the necessary means of transportation. The owners of many of these properties, some undeveloped and others awaiting development, are men of large means and it will be to their interest to encourage and co-operate in the building of railroads to open them and bring them within market range. The coal mines and oil wells of Pennsylvania have made that one of the greatest railroad States in the Union and so will the coal mines and iron mines, (and possibly the oil wells) of the South add immensely to the railroad mileage of this section. The South is to become the iron and coal producer of the future and she will need a now inestimable amount of new railroad to transport to market the output of these mines.

Observant, thinking men see this and that is why so many of them predict a great future for the South, as Mr. Chauncey M. Depew did in his address at Vanderbilt University, when he counselled the young men of the South to stick to the South.

MINOR MENTION.

The statistics of our foreign exports of manufactures for the past thirty-five years, present some interesting facts, and prove, if they prove anything, that one of the most serious obstacles in the way of exports of our manufactures are a high protective tariff and a brisk home demand. During these thirty-five years the per centage of our exports of manufactures compared with our total exports ranged from 12.76 per cent. in 1860, to 21.14 per cent. in 1894, showing that the per centage of exports in manufactures does not keep step with our total shipments, notwithstanding the fact of multiplied labor-saving machinery and consequent reduced cost of production. With these, with the increased production and increase of population, with more rapid and cheaper transportation on land and on sea, our exports of manufactures ought to be three times as great now as as they were in 1860, and if our manufacturers had been thrown upon their own resources, and had not been encouraged to look to the Government for legislation that would enable them to grow rich out of the taxes imposed upon home purchasers, they would doubtless have exerted themselves more to find markets and extend their trade abroad. In 1893 our exports of manufactures amounted to $158,023,118, and in 1894 to $183,718,484, a gain of $25,695,366 in one year. There is but one way to account for this phenomenal increase in that time, and that is that the general depression at home forced the manufacturers who didn't want to suspend operations to seek foreign markets, and they did it. This view is sustained by the fact that with the improved condition of business in this country there has been a notable decline in our exports of manufactures which will be about $12,000,000 less this year than last.

* * *

No week passes that one or more new cotton mills are not projected in the South, and some of them very large ones. This of itself, if other evidence were wanting, would be proof sufficient that the milling business is paying well, and it shows also that capitalists have little apprehension that there is any danger of it being overdone. For some time at least it will not be a question of competition between Southern mills and mills of other sections, and other countries which must demonstrate their ability to hold their own before there will be any practical limit to the milling industry in this section, and that will be a very difficult thing for them to do when with increasing capital and necessary experience Southern enterprise reaches out into new fields, and enters upon new lines of manufactures of which other sections and countries have had and still have full control. Of course Southern manufacturers are not going to confine themselves to the coarser goods on which the profits are comparatively small and leave the finer goods on which the profit is larger to mills of other sections. They will do this only so long as they are satisfied with present profits, and as soon as the increasing number of factories so increases the product as to reduce the profits then the branching out will begin.

CURRENT COMMENT.

—The tortuous course of the Buchanan case in New York, and the long delay of his execution after his conviction, would seem to furnish evidence that the criminal laws of the country are constructed for the benefit of the criminal, to a very great degree. A less lax code and a more prompt punishment of criminals would no doubt have the effect of inducing a greater respect for the law in the minds of those inclined to deeds of violence.—Savannah News, Dem.

—Here is a curious fact. In the Declaration of Independence words are used which have created much trouble. These words are: "All men are born equal." While Jefferson was minister to France he drafted the French Constitution at his house in Paris where a number of the chiefs of the French Revolution met. In this Constitution he corrects his statement in the Declaration. He there states, "All men are born equal in rights." That is before the law, not socially.—New York Mercury Ind,

SWEARING IN RECRUITS.

How Simply It Is Done Here and How Impressively In Germany.

"The unostentatious manner in which our national affairs are administrated is well illustrated by the striking contrast between the ceremony of swearing in recruits in our army and the same ceremony in Germany," remarked an officer who is stationed at Fort Wayne. "Here the recruit, after expressing his desire to serve Uncle Sam, is ushered into the room, a bare, dingy, rented apartment, which serves as office for the enlisting officer of the army, and then and there is called upon to repeat after the said officer the following oath, its solemn import marked by the cursory upward tendency of the irrespective right hand: 'I do solemnly swear that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America, and that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever, and that I will obey the orders of the president of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to the rules and articles of war. So help me God.' Signature to this oath makes him, without more ado, a full fledged soldier.

"How different is the following ceremony used in binding Germany's soldiers to their kaiser: The young conscript is conducted to the church of the parish in which he enlists, where he is first addressed by the pastor on the sacred character and great import of the oath he is about to take; then, the flag of his country and that of his battalion being placed on the altar, the embryo soldier is required to place his left hand on these flags, and raising his right to repeat the following oath: 'I swear before God, who is all-powerful, and who knows all, that I will serve loyally and faithfully my very gracious sovereign under all circumstances. On land and sea, in peace and in war, and in all places I swear to seek only his good and to do everything to prevent injury to him. I swear to observe strictly the articles of war which have just been read to me. I swear to obey all orders and to conduct myself as every courageous, honest soldier ought to do, delighting in fulfilling the duties that honor imposes upon me. As surely as God will aid me in gaining eternity through Jesus Christ. Amen!'

"Is it not a serious question whether our simplicity in the administration of a sacred oath does not defeat its very purpose? We in this free born American republic are justly proud of our simple, unostentatious ways, marked by want of useless ceremony, and we, by our example, daily administer rebuke to the old world of the vanity of its ways, but let us not carry this feeling too far. Human nature here, as elsewhere, is impressionable, and if an obligation is rendered more binding by impressiveness we should not hesitate to employ its necessary accompaniments even to the 'fuss and feathers' employed by our elders in the sisterhood of nations.

"The average American, unversed in patriotic lore, woefully ignorant of patriotic symbols, is constantly accused of want of devotion to his country, of too great individualism, too little nationalism. Let us hope that this is not so; that our patriotism but lies dormant, awaiting the occasion which will call it into play and make its existent strength emphatically evident to the world.

"In the meantime let the soldier swear by his country's beautiful emblem. Furthermore, let the stars and stripes be displayed more often and with more reverence before the people at large. Nothing will contribute further to arouse our heterogeneous population, our too large disorderly element, the product of sordid, selfish individualism, to a realization of other more worthy interests; of a duty paramount to all others, yet so generally lost sight of, to a country that exists, to a flag that waves, on this side of the ocean."—Detroit Free Press.

Napoleon's Great Victories In Italy.

Within 11 days the Austrians and Sardinians were separated, the latter defeated and forced to sign an armistice. After a rest of two days a fortnight saw him victorious in Lombardy and entering Milan as a conqueror. Two weeks elapsed, and again he set forth to reduce to his sway in less than a month the most of central Italy. Against an enemy now desperate and at bay, his operations fell into four divisions, each resulting in an advance—the first, of 9 days, against Wurmser and Quasdanowich; a second, of 16 days, against Wurmser; a third, of 12 days, against Alvinczy, and a fourth, of 30 days, until he captured Mantua and opened the mountain passes to his army.

Within 15 days after opening hostilities against the pope he forced him to sign the treaty of Tolentino, and within 36 days of their setting foot on the road from Mantua to Vienna the French were at Leoben, distant only 90 miles from the Austrian capital, and dictating terms to the empire. In the year between March 27, 1796, and April 7, 1797, Bonaparte humbled the most haughty dynasty in Europe, toppled the central European state system and initiated the process which has given a predominance apparently final to Prussia, then considered but as a parvenu. —Professor Sloane's 'Life of Napoleon' in Century.

He Shaved Himself.

"I heard a good barber story the other day," said a man in the hotel rotunda, "and for genuine sarcasm I believe it carries off the palm. It may be an old one at that, but if it is it's worth repeating. It appears that a certain barber was trying to describe a certain man to a customer in his chair. He thought the customer ought to know him, as he had lived here a long time and had often sat on platforms at public meetings with other vice presidents.

"'He is a tall, thin man, with dark hair,' said the barber.

"'Has he a smooth face?' asked the customer.

"'No,' said the barber, 'he shaves himself.'"—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Moslem Prayer For the Dead Sister.

O Allah, pardon thou our living and our dead, those of us looking on and those of us absent, our little ones and our adults, our men and our women.

O Allah, unto whomsoever thou grant life cause thou him to live resigned (Moslem) to thy will, and whomsoever thou call away make thou him to die in the faith.

Cause thou this departed one to possess thy solace and thy ease, thy mercy and thy grace.

O Allah, if she have been a worker of good works, then do thou add to her good works, and if she have been an evildoer do thou pass it over. And may security and glad tidings surround her with honor and privilege. And free thou her from the torment of the grave and of hell fires, causing her to dwell in the abodes of the paradises with her children. O Allah, make thou her tomb a garden of the gardens of heaven and let not her grave be a pit of the pits of perdition. For thy mercy's sake, O thou most compassionate of the merciful.—Nineteenth Century.

Our Progress In Astronomy.

In speaking of progress in astronomy, Professor J. Norman Lockyer of London says: "I am sorry to say that in this work the center of gravity of the activity has left our country and has gone out west. We have to look to our American cousins for a great deal that we want to know in these matters, for the reason that they now not only have the biggest telescopes and most skilled observers, but also they have been wiser than we—they have occupied high points on the earth's surface and thus got rid of the atmospheric difficulties under which we suffer in England and especially in London."

AMICABLY SETTLED.

It was only after innumerable pieces of evidence, the meaning of which there was absolutely no mistaking, that little Mrs. Denison was at last reluctantly forced to the conclusion that her husband had really got tired of her. His days were given up to the office, his evenings to the club, he had ceased to care about his appearance, and his clothes had become deplorably untidy. For a week she could think of nothing else. At the end of that time she began to look about for means of consolation. For a woman she took a strangely philosophical view. She knew that she could not live without love, but instead of sitting down and deploring her lot she just determined to make the best of things.

There were plenty of men in love with her already. She was far too pretty and charming a woman not to have the chance of numberless admirers, but hitherto she had always proved entirely inaccessible. Henceforth she made up her mind things should be different.

Her choice fell on Algie Owen. He was little more than a boy, only just down from Oxford, and had long admired her in silence. A word from her would, she knew, be sufficient to bring him to her feet. Within an hour from the time she came to her decision Algie had received a note asking him to come round to tea the next day. Within a week he had become her constant companion, and her husband's indifference had lost half its sting. And at the end of a month Mr. Denison, coming home unexpectedly, had surprised Algie in the act of pressing a kiss on her lips. His first impulse was to kick the boy out of the house, his second to leave it himself. Neither impulse, however, prevailed. He just stood there looking. And as Mrs. Denison was far too frightened to speak it was Algie who at last blurted out, his face rosy red and his lips quivering—he was really very boyish indeed, despite his grown up airs:

"Well, sir, what is to be done?"

"That, sir," said Mr. Denison, almost smiling—the pair before him looked more like two naughty children than anything else, "that, sir, lies with you. What"—ironically—"is your suggestion?"

"I—I will tell you," stammered Algie, "what I—what Mrs. Denison wants. She—she"—it was really a very daring thing to say—"she wants to marry me, and she wants you to go—go and do something that will get—get her—her a divorce."

The suggestion was so cool that for a moment it quite took Mr. Denison's breath away.

"Well, I'm hanged!" he ejaculated at last.

He was silent for a moment, thinking.

"Now," he said at last, "go. Oh, by the way," he added as Algie turned toward the door, "can you come in to dinner this day week? We shall be very pleased to see you."

Algie's blue eyes widened into a stare.

But when the question was repeated and he saw that Denison was in earnest he said that he would be very pleased. And then he went out, wondering what extraordinary thing would happen next, and trying to remember if he had ever heard any reports of madness in the Denison family, and Tom Denison, after ringing for his wife's maid and telling her to see after her mistress, as she wasn't very well, strode off to his club to think out a certain little scheme.

That day week, when Mr. Denison walked into the little drawing room about 20 minutes before the dinner hour—his usual practice was to get home, if at all, about ten minutes after it had been announced—Mrs. Denison opened her eyes very wide indeed. Instead of the old shabby tail coat he had donned what was evidently a brand new dress suit, cut in the latest fashion. His hair had been freshly cut and trimmed, the heavy mustache was curled off his lips, and the yellow rose in his buttonhole became him to perfection. He looked at least a dozen years younger.

He just bent over his wife and gave her a kiss, and then sat himself down to the piano, and his fingers straying over the notes began to sing more to himself apparently than to her. Music always appealed to her, and she could not help remarking in a pause that came between the verses that it was a very pretty song, and she had no idea he could play so well.

"It comes from the new opera at the Futurity," he said. "I haven't got it quite right, but it went something like that, I think, as far as I can remember." He had bought the music three days before and had been trying to get right ever since.

"You are very spruce tonight," she said, looking up as he shut down the piano and took up his stand against the chimneypiece.

"Are you going out anywhere? I'm going to supper, and you will have Owen to entertain you. He is sure to stay late. He hasn't seen you since yesterday, has he?"

She ignored the sarcasm in the suggestion, and, still looking up at him, reflected with an inward sigh that she wished Algie was half as handsome as this husband of hers. Then her mind reverted to the supper.

"It's to be with some woman, I suppose?" she said.

"What?" he queried carelessly.

"Why, this supper."

"Nothing of the kind," he said, but in a tone which only confirmed her suspicions.

"Well, where's it going to be anyway?"

"Oh, at a little place in Soho. I don't suppose you've ever heard of it."

"And you are really going alone?"

"Certainly."

She got up from her chair and came over to where he was standing.

"Can't you make it dinner instead of supper and take me with you?" she said.

"But Mr. Owen?"

"Oh, bother Mr. Owen! He can have his dinner by himself. I can easily invent some excuse."

"And besides it's not exactly the sort of place a woman like you can go to; it's not"—

She flew out of the room and returned a moment afterward in her cloak. "Come along, quick," she said, "or he'll catch us."

"Who?"

"Why, Algie!"

Mr. Denison smiled. It was really very funny.

The dinner was a great success, the champagne irreproachable. As Mr. Denison produced his cigar case he thought he had never seen his wife looking so pretty.

So the divorce never came off, after all. —Pick Me Up.

CURING THE GRIP.

A Paris Specialist Gives the Formula He Has Found Successful.

The Paris Herald publishes a valuable article on the treatment of grip by a Dr. Charles Fauvel, a specialist in this complaint. As local treatment the nose is gently irrigated four times a day with a warm astringent liquid, which can best be done with an India rubber injector. The solution injected should be at a temperature of about 100 degrees F., or as warm as possible. Dr. Fauvel says:

At each sitting two or three liters should be sent up each nostril. The following are the formulae that succeed best:

1. Hot concentrated solution of black tea, with a few drops of lemon juice.
2. Salt water, a tablespoonful of white salt to a liter of water.
3. Chloral, 3 grams.
   Water, 300 grams.
   A tablespoonful to a liter of water.
4. Solutions of boric acid are also of great service.

In addition to these injections it will be found very useful to have recourse to certain powders that can be snuffed up several times a day. The best formula is as follows:

Bismuth	5 grams
Boric acid	2 grams

Dr. Fauvel follows this up by local applications once a day to the nose and post nasal cavity of a few drops of the following preparation:

Chloride of zinc	1 gram
Hydrochloric acid	30 drops
Glycerin	30 grams
Distilled water	30 grams
Hydrochlorate of cocaine	50 centigrams

As for general treatment, he gives a glass of laxative water the first three days, with a drink of weak but hot infusion of marrubium, and quiets the cough every hour with a tablespoonful of the following mixture:

Lettuce water	150 grams
Orange flower water	of each 10 grams
Cherry laurel water	of each 10 grams
Strup of tolu	of each 30 grams
Strup of codeine	of each 30 grams
Spirits of meinderus	4 grams
Tincture of aconite	1 gram

If the patient grows weak or is convalescing, coca wine or coca liqueur, with terpine (20 centigrams of terpine per tablespoonful of liqueur) is recommended. In doses of two to four tablespoonfuls a day.

LONGFELLOW'S YOUTH.

The Poet Was Brought Up in an Atmosphere of Culture.

In the first ten years of the nineteenth century there were born in New England five of the foremost authors of America. Emerson and Hawthorne were four and three years older than Longfellow. Whittier and Holmes were respectively ten months and two years younger. As they grew up and began to write and got to know one another these authors became friends, and their friendship lasted with their lives. One after another they all gained fame, and although not the greatest of the five perhaps Longfellow was always the most popular. Not merely in the United States and Great Britain, but in Canada and Australia and India, and wherever the English language is spoken, there were readers in plenty for the gentle, the manly, the beautiful verses of Longfellow.

His mother's father had been a general in the Revolutionary army. His mother's brother, after whom he was named, had been an officer in the American navy, losing his life in Preble's attack on Tripoli. His father, once a member of congress, was one of the leading lawyers of Portland. And it was in that pleasant Maine city that Henry Wadsworth Longfellow was born, on Feb. 27, 1807. There he passed his childhood. There he got that liking for the sea and for ships and for sailors which was to give a salt water savor to so many of his ballads. There, as he grew to boyhood, he browsed amid the books of his father's ample library, feeling his love for literature steadily growing.

He was a schoolboy of 12 when the first numbers of Irving's "Sketch Book" appeared, and he read it "with ever increasing wonder and delight, spellbound by its pleasant humor, its melancholy tenderness, its atmosphere of reverie." A few months before the "Sketch Book" began, Bryant had published his "Thanatopsis," and others of his earlier poems followed soon. So the schoolboy in Portland came under the influence of Bryant's poetry almost at the same time he felt the charm of Irving's prose. When he was only 13, the young Longfellow began to write verses of his own, some of which were printed in the newspapers. He was only 14 when he passed the entrance examinations of Bowdoin college, where he was to have Hawthorne as a classmate.

Long before his college course was over he had made up his mind to become a man of letters. In his last year at Bowdoin, being then 18, he wrote to his father: "I most eagerly aspire after future eminence in literature. My whole soul burns ardently for it, and every earthly thought centers in it." But here in America in 1825 no man could hope to support himself by prose and verse. Fortunately just then a professorship of modern languages was founded in Bowdoin, and the position was offered to Longfellow, with permission to spend several years in Europe fitting himself for his duties. He accepted eagerly, and his sojourn in France and Spain, in Italy and Germany, made him master of the four great European languages with their marvelous literatures. He studied hard and wrote little while he was away. At last in 1829, being then 22, he returned to his native land and settled down to teach his fellow countrymen what he had learned abroad.—Professor Brander Matthews in St. Nicholas.

Hannah More.

Hannah was taken to see Pope's villa at Twickenham, and there she frankly owns: "I could not be honest for the world. I stole two bits of stone from the grotto, a sprig of laurel from the garden and a pen from one of the bedchambers." She saw the palace of Hampton court, and was more impressed by it than anything else she saw, save the museum. She met Mr. Delany's delightful Duchess of Portland, known to her as Prior's "noble, lovely little Peggy," and she was at the play on the famous evening when Garrick put an end to the silly fashion then prevalent of covering the head with fruits and kitchen garden stuff.

To Hannah's delight the great actor appeared in a female part with his cap covered with every sort of vegetable, and a bunch of carrots at each ear.—All the Year Round.

Too Much System.

"There is too darn much system in this school business," growled Tommy. "Just because I snickered a little the monitor turned me over to the teacher, the teacher turned me over to the principal and the principal turned me over to paw."

"Was that all?"

"No. Paw turned me over his knee."—Indianapolis Journal.

The Domestic Critic.

"You seem to have all the late novels, Jimson. What do you think of them?"

"I haven't read them yet," answered Jimson. "My wife is reading them to see if they are fit or me."—Detroit Free Press.

Passing an Examination.

The story of a well known bishop which reached me the other day seems good enough for publication. The bishop was one day examining a batch of deacons for priests' orders. After the theoretical part of the examination, he said to them: "Gentlemen, you have passed a most excellent examination in theory. I should now like to see you do something practical. I shall go into the next room and personate a sick man. You will come in, one by one, address me as a sick parishioner, and say something comforting." When his lordship had retired, the candidates were in some confusion, and nobody cared to begin, but at last a mad Irishman volunteered to be the first. He entered the study and approached the bishop, who was lying with a woebegone air on the sofa, and thus addressed him: "Oh, Anthony, Anthony! The drink again! Shure it will be the death of ye! Turn from your evil ways before it's too late and be a man!" This is said to be the last time that the bishop held a practical examination.—London Truth.

A Very Natural Inference.

"I don't know. What makes you think so?"

"She cuts up so."—New York Herald.

CAPTAIN WARLEY'S DUEL.

A Story Illustrating the Captain's Courage. "Bully Nelson's" Quarrels.

In a letter to the Charleston News a friend of the late Captain Alexander Fraser Warley of the Confederate navy tells the following story illustrating his personal courage: On entering the United States navy most "youngsters" were submitted to what we know as "hazing," and there was on the training ship to which Warley was assigned an officer named Nelson, of Alabama, I think, who was known as "Bully Nelson," on account of his fondness for annoying his subordinates. He had had many quarrels on his hands in consequence, but generally managed to "know whom to kick."

Warley was sitting quietly in a corner of the messroom the first evening that Nelson joined the ship, somewhere in South American waters. Nelson, seeing the new boy, proceeded to make facetious remarks about the modest, retiring young fellow, who, however, did not notice him at first at all. After awhile Nelson grew more personal, and then Warley warned him to stop, but Nelson mistook his man, and going up to him "tweaked" his nose, saying that was how he treated "youngsters."

Warley indignantly flung aside the book he was reading, and in a voice and with a manner not to be mistaken said to Nelson, "I am going to kill you, and you had better arm yourself." He walked to his bunk, got a pistol, and coming back proceeded to "open fire." He was seized and put under arrest of course, but he said to Nelson, "Meet me on shore at daylight, and we will settle this matter, for it shall not rest here." Nelson, who knew Warley was under arrest, went ashore with friends and spent the night in town enjoying whatever pleasures were to be had, and early in the morning went with his companions to the place Warley had indicated on the shore near by the anchorage. He thought it would be a nice thing to be able to say he had been there and that Warley had not turned up, but he was mistaken again, for Warley was there, dripping wet, having got by his guard and reached the shore by swimming. There was nothing to do but to arrange the "meeting," and Warley requested one of Nelson's friends to act as his second, as under the circumstances he had not been able to bring a friend.

They took their positions and fired, and Nelson was shot through the lungs. There was great consternation, but Warley was the coolest of the party, and taking Nelson up he carried him to the boat which had now come out from the ship and did all he could for the wounded man until the services of the surgeon could be obtained. Nelson recovered, but is said to have died some years afterward from the effects of this wound.

Cooks Who Won't Eat Their Own Dishes.

The fact that cooks rarely have much appetite for the food of their own preparing is illustrated nightly at a well known up town chophouse. There may be found the chef and several of the assistant chefs of one of the first hotels in New York. These men can have anything they want from the kitchens in which they are employed free of cost. The greatest luxuries of the market are at their disposal, and, furthermore, they know that everything is beyond reproach. The kitchens are supplied with all the latest improvements and are so clean and appetizing that visitors are taken through them. As for the cooking, the fact that many of the best known gourmets of the city have forsaken their old resorts for this one is ample recommendation. Yet the men who are responsible for all this go nightly to a simple chophouse where they have to pay the same as other customers for their suppers. The chef gave this explanation:

"When one is constantly surrounded by food stuffs, he gets tired of the sight of them. It is so with any other business. It is all right while you are at it, but when your work is done you want to get away from it. We come here to forget our work and to eat things we have not seen or handled."—New York Sun.

LABRADOR'S COAST.

Barren Shores, Rolling Surge and Many Icebergs Make It Dangerous.

The most northerly lighthouse on the coast of this continent stands on Belle isle, at the head of the straits of that name, a little northeast of Newfoundland. By what freak of taste it was called Belle isle I cannot say, for even the old navigators had such a horror of it that on their charts they marked it with the figure of a demon.

The morning the little mail steamer on which I cruised "down on the Labrador," as the Newfoundlanders say, plunged and rolled past it through the surge the rugged mass of rock crouched there as if ready to seize its prey of ships and human lives. The surf, unheard at our distance, flashed around its base like a long row of glistening teeth. A huge iceberg had drifted in and lay stranded at one end of the island far up on the rocks was the lighthouse; on a shelf below stood a little hut, with provisions, for shipwrecked sailors; the gray morning mists made these look heavy and sodden, and altogether this glimpse of Belle isle was the most desolate scene I had ever beheld. Over our bow the barren coast of Labrador was faintly outlined, and as the last lighthouse on the continent dropped astern I felt that we were indeed drawing away from civilization, and this feeling was strengthened when, as we turned our prow northward, we sighted the vanguard of the seemingly endless procession of huge icebergs drifting slowly down in single file from the mysterious regions of the north.

We had met with single bergs along the Newfoundland coast, but off Labrador they became a constant and unspeakably grand feature in the seaward view. I doubt if they can be seen anywhere else except in arctic and antarctic waters in such numbers, variety and grandeur. The branch of the gulf stream which pushes its way into the Arctic ocean has sufficient force left when it is reflected by the frozen northern boundary of that sea to send an icy current down along the Labrador coast. Practically all the bergs that break loose from the ice sheathed shores of Greenland are borne southward by this current. One morning, when I went upon deck, I counted no less than 135 huge ones. Some of these were great solid blocks of ice; others were arched with numerous Gothic passageways; some reached with spirelike grace high up into the air. All reflected with prismatic glory the rays of the sun.—Gustav Kobbe in St. Nicholas.

THE EXPRESSIVE HUMAN HAND.

Strength of the Fingers Is an Index to Mental Balance.

Much has been written about the hand. Artists have depicted its perfection, physiognomists have interpreted its shape and expression, chirologists and the gypsy queens have tried to prophesy from its markings. But a study of its peculiarities by the inductive method takes one into entirely new fields and shows that to interpret the significance of the hand one must start on quite new lines. There is something perhaps in the fact that the artistic hand has somewhat tapering fingers, but beyond this one deals with uncertainties, and I recollect an idiot youth whose extremities had the contour of a genius or a Trilby.

If one examines the hands of a large number of persons with a nervous endowment, he will find curious defects in the length and relative proportions of the fingers. The length of the finger is determined by that of the middle one. If the index and medius are closed upon the palm, the ring and little finger being left extended, the middle finger will reach close to the place where the so called life line runs down, between the ball of the thumb and that of the little finger. It will touch the palm just below the highest part of the ball of the thumb. The middle finger is taken as the standard of length by which to gauge that of others. In a normal hand the forefinger reaches just to the root of the middle finger, the ring finger is longer and should reach nearly to the middle of the nail of the medius, while the little finger should reach to the last joint of the third finger. Now, in inebriates, epileptics, neurotics and the degenerative generally these proportions are often not observed. The most common defect is shortness, especially of the third and little fingers, though sometimes a disproportionate length occurs. Sometimes these fingers are unnaturally slender, or the little finger is strongly bent. The most common abnormality of the thumb is excessive shortness, with a defective mobility. These peculiarities, well accentuated, from what we may call the "decadent hand"—the hand that writes our sensuous novels, the Hauptmann drama, paints symbolic pictures and exploits pure atheism. Such hands may be well formed to the ordinary eye and may be attached to slender and graceful limbs, but this kind of beautiful hand and arm is found quite as often among the children of alcoholics and among those highly cultivated families which have become degenerated by vicios vices and vicionus crossing.—Medical Record.

PYGMIES.

Some Information About These Strange Mites of Humanity.

The Greek word pygmy means a measure from the elbow to the hand. The pygmies were a fabulous race of dwarfs about whom many interesting stories have been told. According to Homer, they were so very small that they were attacked every year by the cranes on the coast of Oceanus and were unable to defend themselves.

Writers of a later date locate the pygmies at the mouth of the Nile. We also read of northern pygmies inhabiting the region of Thule, and of others that lived in subterranean dwellings on the eastern side of the Ganges. It is said that once when Hercules visited the country inhabited by these little creatures two whole pygmy armies attacked him while he was asleep. One army fell upon his right and the other upon his left, but the hero easily and quickly rolled them up in his lion's skin.

They were not, it seems, at all afraid of Hercules, for by the aid of a ladder they climbed up his drinking cup and helped themselves to its contents.

Aristotle says: "The pygmies were probably some diminutive race in Upper Egypt who rode very small horses and lived in caves." He did not believe that the stories told about them were altogether fabulous.

It has often been declared that there are pygmy races of human beings in the heart of Africa. Indeed Du Chaillu some time ago discovered a pygmy race in the mountainous country on the east of the southern great branch of the Ogobai. They are about 4½ feet in height and are called Orbongos. "They live in the midst of negro tribes of ordinary size," says Du Chaillu, "and there is nothing remarkable about them except their diminutive size."—Baltimore American.

A Unique Coat of Arms.

There was one Philadelphian who not only invented arms for himself, but new and republican arms, after discarding the ancestral arms of his family. This was Peter Brown, at one time an eminent citizen of Philadelphia.

In 1794 William Priest, an English musician, became attached to the theater in Philadelphia in his professional capacity. In 1803 Mr. Priest printed in London a book entitled "Priest's Travels In the United States," which is now exceedingly rare. The frontispiece to this book is a strange and curious design, entitled "Peter Brown's Arms." In explanation of this frontispiece Mr. Priest says: "Peter Brown, a blacksmith of this city, having made his fortune, set up his coach, but so far from being ashamed of the means by which he acquired his riches, he caused a large anvil to be painted on each side of his carriage, with two pairs of naked arms in the act of striking. The motto, 'By this I got my'."

What a Blessing Is Education!

These are some answers to examination questions given in an eighth grade school not a thousand miles from Chicago:

"Liberia was established in 1823 as a colony for aspirated negroes."

"Nine-tenths of all the plants not found in any other part of the world are found in Australia."

"Salem Witchcraft was neither a soldier nor a sailor, but he discovered some cities."—Great Divide.

Mrs. Kendal's Nerve.

Somebody told me a story about Mrs. Kendal, but while I am perfectly willing to concede to Mrs. Kendal a great many wonderful qualities I don't believe she is possessed of superhuman courage. However, this is the story: Mrs. Kendal, you know, owns a great many valuable jewels. She wore a great diamond star in her hair one night. The scene was impassioned, and as she threw herself about energetically the star fell out. Mrs. Kendal saw it. She saw Mr. Kendal move across the stage. She saw him approach the diamonds. She saw his foot fall on it, and she heard the sound as the exquisite trifle was ground into the carpet. Yes, she said no word and gave no sign till the act was over. Do you believe it? Mrs. Kendal may be an artist, but she's too much of a woman for that. I don't believe the story. —Washington Post.

Fond of Societies.

Captain Lewis Wiggins of Savannah, the port warden, has a record as a secret society man that can hardly be equaled. He has been a Rechabite for 51 years, an Odd Fellow for 47 years, a Mason for 27 years and a member of the encampment for 34 years. Captain Wiggins smoked steadily for 55 years. Three years ago, at the age of 73, he decided to stop, and he did so at once without any temporizing. His health improved from then on, and he has as good a prospect of becoming a centenarian as any other man in Georgia.—Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.

ATTRACTION.

It isn't everybody that can make a success out of the Dry Goods business. Some natural fitness is necessary. Competition is so keen that some advantages must be possessed. Without these essentials, you might as well expect to kindle a fire with brickbats a to make and hold a trade. Grapes don't grow on thorns here any more than they do in Judea, but the tree is still known by its fruit. Just now the people seem to have caught on to the fact that the bargains we offer cannot be matched everywhere—or anywhere for that matter.

The Morning Star.

WILMINGTON, N. C.

SATURDAY MORNING, JULY 6, 1895

SPOTS AND FUTURES

New York Sun's Review of the Cotton Market. Net Receipts at the Ports-mouth.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

NEW YORK, July 2.—The following are the total net receipts of cotton at all ports since September 1st, 1894: Galveston 1,665,895; New Orleans, 2,569,581; Mobile 250,676; Savannah 941,048; Charleston 427,447; Wilmington 294,488; Norfolk 469,694; Baltimore 117,781; New York 187,686; Boston 339,718; Newport News 33,630; Philadelphia 123, 303; West Point 286,015; Brunswick 103, 344; Velasco 593; Port Royal 158,879; total 7,893,167.

The Sun says: Cotton fell six to seven points, recovered five points of this and then receded and closed quiet and steady at a net decline of seven points, with sales of 120,800 bales. New Orleans declined four to seven points. Liverpool declined 1-32d with sales of 8,000 bales. Futures declined three and a half points, closing quiet. The Manchester dispatch to the Cotton Exchange reports yarns weak and cloths quiet. The Bombay receipts for the week were 15,000 bales, against 25,000. Spot cotton here was 1-16c lower, with sales of 572 bales for spinning.

To-day's features: Depression was caused by a decline in Liverpool and heavy selling, supposed to be for New Orleans account. Some of the crop news was favorable, and there was more or less long liquidation for local and Southern account, besides some hammering by the bears. On the other hand, the visible supply is decreasing pretty rapidly. English spinners have large contracts on hand and only a moderate supply of raw cotton. Some of Manchester's advices indicate a firmer market there and finally excessive rains continue in Mississippi, Alabama, Tennessee and Arkansas. The Government report of Wednesday expressed the opinion that there had been too much rain in Mississippi, Alabama and parts of Arkansas.

Some private advices from Alabama take the ground that the diminished use of fertilizers in that State is having its natural effect in superabundance of stalk and indications of a light fruitage. Liverpool was buying here to-day, and so were some of the local shorts. Still, after a brief rally, due to very heavy rains, the market again sagged, and closed at about the lowest figures of the day.

SAD ENDING

Of a Fourth of July Celebration at La Salle, Illinois. One Man Killed and Many Persons Injured.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

LA SALLE, July 15.—A successful celebration here yesterday had a sad ending last night, and one man lies dead and two others are seriously injured as the result of an accident during the fireworks display. A bomb rocket was sent up, but after going a short distance it fell and exploded, setting fire to a large quantity of fireworks, which exploded with terrific force. There were 6,000 people within a block of the place at the time and a terrible panic followed. Horses ran away and the crowd stampeded, crushing women and children under foot. One hundred persons were more or less seriously injured. William Tapt, of Tampico, Ill., was struck on the head by a rocket and will probably die. Harry Kenny, a waif, who says his parents live in California, was horribly burned about the face, head and arms and is seriously injured. Harry Joy, of Wenon, had his arm broken. The adjoining buildings which caught fire were saved by the department.

BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

FAVORABLE TRADE CONDITIONS CONTINUE.

An Upward Tendency in Prices. Some Staples Are Lower—No Material Improvement in the South.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star

NEW YORK, July 5.—Bradstreet's to-morrow will say: There are 197 business failures reported throughout the United States this week, as compared with 215 last week and 164 in the first week of July, 1894, 319 in 1893 and 153 in the like week 1892.

Notwithstanding the week is broken by a holiday, favorable trade conditions heretofore reported continue to exercise a pronounced influence, prominently general advances in prices of staples and in wages of industrial employes. The extent of the voluntary advances in wages, reported within a month or two, has outgrown the resources of voluntary statistical bureaus which have endeavored to keep track of them, latest advices being that more than 1,000,000 industrial workers have received an advance averaging about ten per cent.

The upward tendency in prices while not as marked as [illegible] striking, those of lumber, the printed print cloths being new. Cotton goods are firm generally on the late advance in raw cotton, although some varieties are quiet at this, the midsummer season. Fancy prints are active for Fall delivery. Wool, which was late in starting in the race for higher quotations is quoted at another advance for South American and Australian varieties. Prices at London sales are up ten to fifteen points, which having been more than discounted here, induces the trade to anticipate reaction unless London quotations advance further. Cotton also is higher, as is leather, following which we have a repetition of the announcement made each week for more than a month that quotations for pig iron and steel billets have advanced. To this must be added a similar statement in respect to bar iron.

Among the list of staples for which prices are lower are flour, wheat, corn and oats, in all instances the outcome of reports of improved crop conditions. Pork and lard are also lower, as are potatoes and butter.

No material improvement is reported from the South, rains continuing to be damaging to agricultural interests and to check business in Texas, while at South Atlantic and Gulf States cities the quiet movement of staple goods and fair [illegible] unsatisfactory collections of the past month or two continue. But advices from nearly all cities reported appear that wholesale dealers in nearly all lines are greatly encouraged as to the outlook for business during the Autumn, believing that the demand will be greatly stimulated by the very general, and, as it is now believed, permanent improvement in prices.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

September Wheat, Corn and Oats Closed Lower — Cash Products Firm and Higher.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Wheat—Prices were firm early. The Missouri report giving an improvement of fourteen points in the condition of winter wheat in that State, during the past month, took away all the strength, however, and prices fell away about a cent. The local crowd over-sold themselves in their enthusiasm, and in endeavoring to cover sent values up again to very near the top. A wave of weakness came over all the markets near the close, and wheat suffered like everything else, the inside quotations for the day being those established. September wheat opened from 71¼c to 71¾c, sold between 71⅛@71c and 70⅛@70⅝c, closing at 70⅝c—¼@⅝c lower. Cash wheat did not vary much in price from Wednesday, although the close was nominally weak with the futures.

A good shipping demand was reported for corn and charters for 385,000 bushels were made. This was the main supporting influence, prices however was not sufficiently powerless to resist the closing weakness that struck all grains, and provisions also. A moderate scalping trade was all that was done in the speculative branch. The fluctuations and changes of wheat were closely followed. September corn opened from 46¼c to 46⅝c, sold between 46⅝c and 45⅝@45⅞c, closing at the latter—½c under Wednesday. Cash corn (sample lots) were firm and ½c per bushel higher. Oats—A full trade and slow action to prices were noted in oats. The tone of wheat and corn found reflection in this market, but the changes in prices were not wide. The close was weak at the inside. Cash oats were in good demand and ½c higher for sample lots.

Provisions—Scarcely a dozen trades were made in the product until noon to-day. After that hour there was some improvement to the business, but it was at the decrease of values. Holders were good sellers, particularly of pork, with receipts and sales declining through sympathy. Higher hogs gave tone of firmness to the opening and early portion of the session, but that influence was forgotten in the end. A prominent speculator said recently enough to-day to have a decided effect in aiding the market during the [illegible] September pork closed Wednesday, lard 2½c lower, September ribs 5c lower.

MRS. FARRALL'S TRIAL.

Damaging Evidence Against the Handsome Defendant.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

LA PLATA, Md., July 5.—The evidence adduced at to-day's hearing in the trial of Mrs. Belle Farrall, charged with poisoning her husband was more damaging to the handsome defendant than anything that has preceded it. George E. Chapealear, a drug clerk, testified that on Nov. 21st, 1894, Mrs. Farrall purchased a small bottle of strychnine, saying she wanted it to kill rats.

Albert Farrall, brother of the deceased, said that he one day accused her of having poisoned her husband, and she broke down, saying: "Oh, Al! I will only undo what I have done." The witness also stated that Mrs. Farrall confessed to him that she had been an unfaithful wife.

Mrs. Olympia Burch, a housekeeper in the Farrall household, deposed that Eugene Hall, the man with whom it is claimed Mrs. Farrall was infatuated, often visited Mrs. Farrall both before and after her husband's death. She gave damaging testimony regarding the relations of the prisoner and Hall.

Daniel Dubel, a painter, residing at 1104 O street S. E., Washington, testified that the accused and a young man whom he since learned was Eugene Hall, rented the house at 1106 O street, Southeast, next to his, in the latter part of last January, and lived there together for about a month. Witness had seen Hall carry provisions, etc., into the house. Several times Hall had gone out the back gate, when visitors called at the house, as though to avoid being seen by them. At this point Hall was called for identification, but could not be found. An attachment was issued. It is said that Hall has gone beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, as he is loath to testify in the case.

Noel Carter gave [illegible] that Mrs. Farrall was taken ill [illegible] hotel. Farrall appeared cheerful and in good health but [illegible] few hours later.

Matilda Wade, a colored servant, testified as to criminal relations between the defendant and Eugene Hall.

The Court at 6 o'clock adjourned until to-morrow.

Minister to Mexico, is in Washington and expresses an intention to return to his post in the [illegible] severe illness caused his return to North Carolina, and it was generally supposed that he would tender his resignation on the expiration of his leave of absence. His health is now such a [illegible] way to restoration that he will resume his diplomatic functions in the City of Mexico if there is no resignation. Gen. Ransom was at the State Department to-day.

STORM IN BALTIMORE.

Rain, Lightning and Hail Do Much Damage.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

BALTIMORE, July 5.—There was a terrible rain fall, accompanied by vivid lightning and sharp claps of thunder that made people nervous, shortly after 5 o'clock this afternoon. The storm lasted about an hour, and in that time the streets and basements were flooded with water. Many cellars were filled with water, and the damage to goods will be considerable. Reports from the suburbs indicate that the storm was severe in that section also. Hail fell in many places, and the temperature dropped from 76 to 62 degrees. The storm ended as suddenly as it began.

KENTUCKY POPULISTS

In State Convention Unfriendly to Tyler and His Gubernatorial Nominations.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., July 5.—The Kentucky Populists were in session early this morning, but it was nearly noon before they got down to real work. The first thing was the report of the Committee on Resolutions, which presented the Omaha platform. There were many amendments, but as adopted it endorsed the Omaha platform and declared for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at 16 to 1. A delegation of ladies appeared before the Convention and urged the Convention to adopt a plank in its platform endorsing women's suffrage, but it was voted down.

At 12:30 the Convention proceeded with the nominations. Hon. T. S. Peters, of Owensboro, was nominated by acclamation for Governor. W. G. Blair, of Nicholas, for Lieutenant Governor and R. Gardner, of Hardin, for Treasurer, all by acclamation.

Things We Understand,

And Things We Do Not Understand.

The Depositor in the Wilmington Savings and Trust Company does not understand how the decline in price of silver has caused the price of cotton to decline, when the price of cotton declined more rapidly for several years before '73 (when silver did not decline materially) than at any time since, and was lower for several years before the war than at present, though silver was as high as it ever was at any time as it is at present. The same depositor does not understand what use the money in the

Wilmington Savings and Trust Company, has for the protection of depositors.
